In the Spanish language this covering was referred to as a tapas, meaning 'to cover.' This tapas kept insects, dust and debris from settling in the wine and served to whet the appetite of the hungry travelers. From this simple beginning the tapa evolved. A slice of Serrano ham and a bit of Manchego cheese with marinated olives were added as toppings as enterprising innkeepers vied to attract the travelers' interest - and - by offering inventive and luscious dishes that included yet another glass of wine.
